

About Yuheng Ko

Yuheng Ko is a PhD candidate in Comparative Literature at University of California-Riverside, with Designated Emphasis in Speculative Fictions and Cultures of Science. His current project explores mantic experiences and activities in early China and ancient Greece, with a particular focus on their narrative representations across textual traditions and literary genres. A comparatist in Sino-Hellenic studies, he is also working on reading ancient and modern speculative narratives in juxtaposition through the lens of the history of science and thought to explore the possibilities of ancient or indigenous scientific models and discern their aesthetic implications.
